

PARIS UNDER FIRE.

AN IRON HAIL ON THE DOOMED CAPITAL.

The Prussian Bombardment and ## Where the Shot Falls.

The Work of Ruin in Fifty Municipal Sections—Review of the Consequences.

PARIS, Jan. 10, 1871.

"Nous sommes en plein bombardement." The iron hailstorm which commenced to fall upon our forts with the dawn of Friday, the 30th of December, was extended upon Thursday, the 5th of January, to two of our arrondissements, the Fifth and Fourteenth, and within the last forty-eight hours has descended with unparalled intensity upon the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth arrondissements. Every one who is familiar with the map of Paris cannot fail to be aware that the Fourth arrondissement, which is called that of the Hotel de Ville, is not far from the center of the city.

But for these who are not familiar with the city, it is difficult to say that the bombardment of Paris, in accordance to the municipal division of Paris, it is distributed or parcelled out into twenty arrondissements and thirty quarters.

BUILDINGS SUBJECTED TO THE FIRE OF THE GERMAN GUNS.

Confining myself for the present to those upon which the Prussian projectiles have hitherto fallen, I will enumerate the principal buildings which are this night subjected to the fire of our enemy. The Fourth arrondissement, called the Hotel de Ville, contains the "quarters" of (1) St. Merri, (2) St. Germain, (3) the Arsenal, (4) Notre Dame. It is the very heart of Paris, and includes the two islands on the Seine, upon one of which stands the splendid edifice of the Cathedral Church of Notre Dame, the precise date of whose erection has not been accurately fixed. But it has been abundantly established that upon this very spot a votive altar was raised by the Romans to Jove—an altar of which the foundations were discovered in 1711, and transferred to the Palace des Thermes, one of the residences of the Roman Governor of Gaul, in which they have since been carefully preserved. Thousands of English visitors have curiously explored this ancient building and its still more interesting neighbor, the Hotel de Clugny. In the eyes of Parisians the Cathedral Church of Notre Dame, the subject of one of Victor Hugo's earliest and, in my opinion, noblest romances, has always appeared as sacred as Westminster Abbey to the inhabitants of London or their ancient and superstitious to the inhabitants of York. And this is the building within two hundred yards of which Prussian shells have been last night falling.

IN THE FIFTH ARRONDISSEMENT.

Turning now to the Fifth arrondissement let me at once state that it contains some of the most interesting and storied spots within the French metropolis. Within it are situated the following quarters:—1, St. Victor; 2, Jardin des Plantes; 3, Val de Grace; 4, Sorbonne. The Jardin des Plantes, or Zoological Garden of Paris, is well known to every stranger who ever passed a week in this city, and is the one monument which, above all others, seems to keep fresh the memory of Louis XIII.—by no means the worst of French kings—who, yielding to the solicitations of his two physicians, founded it in 1635. But the greatest glory which attaches to this garden of natural history is that, in 1793, the greatest naturalist whom the world has hitherto known, Buffon, was appointed to the functions of its superintendent.

THE MILITARY HOSPITAL OF VAL DE GRACE.

In the Rue St. Jacques, established by the Emperor Napoleon, in the buildings of a convent of Benedictine nuns, is perhaps the most important school of military surgery in the world. In front of it stands the bronze statue of Baron Larrey, the Surgeon-in-Chief to the great Napoleon's armies, and declared by him in his will to be "the most virtuous man that I have ever known." At the foot of stands the extract from Napoleon's will, and the bequest of 100,000 francs, or $4,000, which those eulogistic words portended. It is true that within these last twenty years, and especially since the Crimean and American wars, the military surgery of France has not kept pace with that of England or the United States. But as a purely military hospital that of Val de Grace still occupies the foremost rank. Within its enclosure stands a church founded by Louis XIII. in 1625, and which, after the death of its founder, was married two years afterwards, gave birth in 1638 to a son, who afterwards became Louis XIV. This church is surrounded by a lofty and conspicuous dome, which, within the last five days, has been a favorite point of aim for Prussian projectiles.

LARRY'S STATUE.

WOUNDED PRUSSIAN PLACED IN THE HOSPITALS UNDER FIRE.

Finding that many German shells fell in and about this asylum of wounded Frenchmen, General Trochu caused them to be removed two or three days ago, and has since introduced into it the sick and wounded Prussians who are captives in Paris.

A notification has been given to the Prussians that the Hospital of Val de Grace is now open to them, and that they may send their wounded compatriots, and within the last twenty-four hours the lofty dome of its church has ceased to be a point de mire for Prussian shells. But perhaps the most interesting building which the Fifth arrondissement contains is the famous Collège de la Sorbonne, founded in the thirteenth century as a school for ecclesiastics, became the parent of the University of Paris, and conferred upon the Gallican Church during the middle ages a reputation for learning which they are far from having since sustained. In this school the French language was educated, and here, in a magnificent church, of which he himself laid the foundation, his remains are interred. No one who has read Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution" can have forgotten that in 1793, when the head of the mob was decapitated by the guillotine, it was here, and not in the guillotine, that the head of the mob was decapitated by the guillotine. The family of M. Armitz, was restored upon December 14, 1866, and the Collège de la Sorbonne is now the property of the French Academy and other illustrious personages.

IN THE SIXTH ARRONDISSEMENT.

I come next to the Sixth arrondissement, that of Luxembourg. It contains among its quarters:—1, The Odéon; 2, The Monnaie; 3, Notre Dame des Victoires; 4, St. Germain des Prés; 5, St. Etienne du Mont; 6, St. Louis de France; 7, St. Louis de France; 8, St. Louis de France; 9, St. Louis de France; 10, St. Louis de France; 11, St. Louis de France; 12, St. Louis de France; 13, St. Louis de France; 14, St. Louis de France; 15, St. Louis de France; 16, St. Louis de France; 17, St. Louis de France;
